PUBLIC UTILITIES BILL DISCUSSED

Sentiment that what is Good in the Bill as Drafted Should be Saved

ADVERSE REPORT MAY BE VOTED DOWN

Opinion that the Bill Should be Brought Up in House for Discussion and Attempt Made to Amend it so that It Might Prove Acceptable to the People of the State—Wednesday's Discussion.

Hartford, April 28.—At the close of the debate on the public utilities bill this afternoon, it was the opinion of a number of members of the committee on judiciary that the measure might be voted down and that the bill itself be brought up for discussion in the house and that attempts be made to amend it so that it might be acceptable to the people of the state and to get out of it some of the features which are the strongest points of objection among those who are opposed to it. The sentiment seemed strong today to save what is good in the bill and to attempt to amend it so that it might be acceptable to the people of the state and to get out of it some of the features which are the strongest points of objection among those who are opposed to it. The sentiment seemed strong today to save what is good in the bill and to attempt to amend it so that it might be acceptable to the people of the state and to get out of it some of the features which are the strongest points of objection among those who are opposed to it.
